The US Drones Quilt project is a work of collective art designed to remind us that often the victims of drone attacks are people like us who are afraid, alone, and innocent. Each square of the quilts is made by volunteers who wish to remember the civilian victims of these attacks. The goals are to raise awareness, to advocate politically for regulation of militarized drones, to connect us deeply to the victims of drone warfare and their families, and to convert pain into beautiful, activist art.

Drones are remotely detonated weapons. They can be used in the Middle East, for example, but detonated by someone in the US. The quilt restores humanity to those killed or maimed and reminds people that for every single victim of a drone there was a real person with loves, desires, and a life.
